

HEARD BY THE DESK SERGEANT.

It was in ragged clothes, very ragged clothes; with toes protruding from walk-word shoes; with cold hands and ears, and sorrowful eyes peering from hungry faces that little George Washington and Dick Lee, colored children of seven and eight years of age, respectively, entered police station No. 4 one snowy night and strete up their arms that they might reach the brass railing that separates the desk ser-geant from the mob, said, in timid tones: Please, Mister Policeman, can we sleep here tonight?"

bere tonight?"

Desk Sergeant Voss, Lieutenant Vernon, Sergeant Daly and Policenan Mobi were playing peanuckle in the squad room and did not remark the incident at the time of its occurrence, but Acting Desk Sergeant Rink had seen the green reather doors of the station open and now leaned his great, brawny form over the rail to look down and discover if he could see what the matter was and whence came that sobbing, cloking speech: "Please, Mister, can we sleep here tonight?"

"Weil. you bet you can," said Rink, overlooking the grammar of the application and with such hospitable vigor in his voice that the ticking of the clock was hushed, and the anorting of Al Vernon's steed could not be

Some of the prisoners in "Old Cherry" Some of the prisoners in "Old Cherry" clanked their cell doors and Mr. Voss was saying, "Twenty, thirty, sixty," Lieut. Vernon stated "Diamonds is trumps," Sergt. Daly said, "I will raid that pot," and Mr. Mont said he thought he "Schmelt schmoke." During all this police commotion the little boys had sought shelter behind the doors of the ward-room, where on one side they could hear the tramping of the booted officer and the jingle and clatter of their accountements as they buckled on their belts, and on the other side they on their belts, and on the other side they could hear the row that the innates of the several cells were making—always making. When the station had quieted down they emerged from their hiding place and resumed their interview with Rink.

"Where do you live, said Rink," as a call from Floodfield came in and the wagon

"We don't live nowhere, nin't got no place to live," said George Washington, who was spokesman of the duo and whose black face had big tear stains under the eyes and around the nose, notwithstanding that every few seconds he passed his coat sleeve over his face and mopped those tears

"Where's your mammy?" said Rink, be-coming somewhat affected despite the police heart that it is claimed still beats under his brass and blue.

"We ain't got no mammy, and we ain't "We aim't got no manny, and we aim to had nothing to eat. Mammy did live down in Willow Tree, but I don't know where she's gone, and Dick Lee, this here boy, never had no manimy."

By this time the crowd in the back room come out to see the strange "case,"

and Mr. Voss said:
"Have you boys had supper?"
"No, sir, and no breakfast neither."
Mohl took off his hat and passed it

Most took off his fact and passed around, everybody in the gasg chipping in, and in a few minutes one of the nearby lunch houses was turned inside out in providing the boy tramps with a supper that would have made glad any of the curled darlings who bask in the sunshine of dollars and ride in purse-girl laps.

Every steeple, every chimney, every house-top was crowned with a coronet of sky-born crystals and the city skept under a covedid as white as an angel swing. Every ound of the night was muffled by the snow. All was still at station No. 6, and the inst man on duty had turned in his 1 o'clock

Desk Sergt. Garner lolled back in nis easy chair, dreaming of that celestial realm where station cierks will receive their just reward. "Old Tab," the station mouser, was snuggled near the stove. The storm door of the station parted

The storm door of the sention parted slightly, grated on its hinges, and the rush of cold air roused the dosing man. He yawned, rubbed his eyes, looked, lowered his feet from the table, and looking again, aw a young woman leaning on the rail.

She was hatless, her hands were clasped She was hatless, her hands were chapter over the brass rading, her pretty head was bowed in grief upon her small ungioved hands, and over all, a tanged mass of blonde hair fell in picturesque confusion. A thin shawl, which she had worn, had A lift start, which says and walk to the fallen to the floor. She did not speak to the stern old deak sergeant, but from under that flaffy treasure of tangled hair, a sob, followed by a sigh, welled forth, and penitent tears trickled to the planking. "Well, what is it?" commanded the officer in the mechanical tones with which station offito ask these questions.

The howel head raised slowly and faced the man behind the desk. the man behind the desk.

"There, there, brace up, girl, brace up and sing out what's wrong," said Garner, softening and beginning to feel that the case in front of him was not of the usual character. With this invitation, the girl did brace up, and between her sobs, which she tried valiantly to stifle, she told this "I am ashamed to acknowledge what I have to tell, but if I am ever again to be honest, I might just as well begin right here. I want to redeem myself as ch as a woman, fallen from the state ear, and where I shall pray for the for-word was spoken. After he had seen his charge stowed safely away, he descended to the main room of the station, loiled back in his chair, but he did not sleep. He only thought. Old Tab mangped near the stove and the clock ticked on, on, on.

"You can't teach an old dog new tricks," said 8am at police station No. I hast night when he entered and reported to Desk Sergt. Eberly that one of the old police horses, which had been sold from the service two or three years ago, had broken away from its owner, had come back to the station, pushed open the gates at the alley cutrance, and when discovered had backed under the shafts of the parol wagon, and was standing there waiting for the alarm to sound and the harness to be snapped on him.

This was a bit of interesting information, out of the station routine, and attracted ediusidecable notice from the men who were cliher on guly or, were loitering there. Everybody in the station left his post and went to take a fond look at the old horse. It was a stalwart sorrel with white stockings and a blazed face, and had been known in the service of the department as Bill.

It was said that Bill, before he had been assigned to duty as a patrol horse, had done duty in a fire engine. Certain it is though, that old Bill used once to pull the patrol wagon of the First precinct around the streets of the city at a lively pace. He was always proud of his occupation, but once he fell and struck lame. He grew feeble and was sold by the departpation, but once he reil and struck lame. He grew feeble and was sold by the department. Ender careful treatment by his new employer, Mr. Finley, he gained strength. He waxed fat and hearty and sarved with his new master for two years. Last Wednesday night he took it into his red field to revisit his old stamping grounds, and his keeper, having left the door of his own stable unbarred, he made his way into the street and brissly trotter around to twelfth street, turned into C around to twelfth street, turned into C, passed round through the alley which he used to know so well and which it seems he lifted not forgotten, and entering the gates of the precinct stable yard, he went to the shed where the patrol stands and wheeling round, placed limined in position to be hitched up.

It was nearly midnight when Sam heard the trampling of hoofs in the brick-paved yard, and thinking that one of the regular horses of the station was making his escape, found old Bill. It is even said by the police that Bill recognized all the old timers at the station. Be that as it may, it is oute certain that all the old timers knew Bill.

at Sand Point. When the bodies of Jay 8. Davis and When the bodies of Jay 8. Davis and Fred Fisher, who were drowned in Great Sodus Bay, last May, were discovered, the Emery cottage was vacant though completely furnished, and being the nearest building, by the orders of Coroner E. J. Whattleton, the bodies were carried thither, where the autopsies were subsequently held.

To keep out the prying eyes of observers, the cargets were torn up and hung at the windows. Then the cooking utensils were used to contain various portions of the mey cleaned up the cottage, but nothing could drive away the disembodied spirits of the unfortunate young men, as for some reason they took a fancy to the Emery cottage. Several parties of young people reated it, but after remaining there a night or two they quietly decamped. Ugly stories got affoat.

Mischievous boys nailed such signs as "Spooks to let," "Ghosts for sale," and "The morgue" to the premises. Finally Mr. Emery himself moved in, but his family did not care to remain there any longer than the others. Just what hap pened nobody cares to tell, but there are pened nobody cares to tell, but there are whispers of groans, blows, the splashing of water, and blood curdling screams that case, laudests on, windy nights. However foolish such stories sound, they are believed by hundreds in and about Sodus Point, and the cottage is rendered worse than useless by then? Mr. Enery says that $1,500, nucl. less, $187, would not pay for his loss.

MRS ELIZABETH J SOMERS,

Principal

He Had a Smap.
"I was a stockholder in the first railroad ever built in Oregon," said a veteran Wall street man, "and it was a snap. It was a street railroad in Portland, built in 1861, and road, rolling stock and mules cost only a littlemore than $20,000. It was a mile long, and every man, woman and child that rode that mile had to come down with 25 cents. There were only six stocklinders, and the first year we paid for the road and divided nearly $50,000 in profits. We didn't know what a good thing we had, and when in 1884 Ben Holliday offered us $209,000 for it, cash, we, like fools, went and sold it to him. I wish I had it now."—New York Sun.
